been prorogued. The session was a very long one, having lasted nearly ten months. Several most important measures, however, were left over, and two of the principal bills, namely, those for the reconstitution of the two Houses of Parliament, both fell through. At the viceregal speech which closed the tion the failure of both these measures is charged upon the Upper House. In the bill rearranging the electorates for the Assembly, the Upper House introduced clauses providing for the self-registration of voters and among these clauses there were two as to which the question of privilege was raised. One of these provided that registrars and clerks of erty Sessions, on whom would devolve the duty of receiving the applications, should have such remuneration as Parliament might authorise on that behalf. The other clause provided that the applicant for a vote should pay a small fee, the amount of which was left blank for the Assembly to fill in. The President ruled that the clause was inoperative.

Speaker ruled that the insertion of these clauses had substantially made the measure a money bill, such as could only be initiated in the House of Commons, and that, according to the precedent of the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, the bill should be dropped. A decision was given within two days of the termination of the session, the arrangements for the next session were made, and the bill was dropped.

The other measure, which was for reconstituting the Upper House on an elective basis, came to grief some time ago and English readers have already been informed of the circumstances attending its disappearance.

Since the session of Parliament closed there has been published a correspondence between LORD GREY and the present PREMIER of the colony respecting the necessity of having two

...of Parliament, Earl GREY, who expressed his wish that his views may be in some way laid before the colonists, suggests that instead of two Chambers we should be content with one, and that we should seek to get the conservative or moderating element by the appointment of life members in the assembly itself, these members to be ected by the Assembly under the operation of the cumulative vote. There are several politicians in the colony who advocate the Chamber as being simpler and more democratic, but the suggestion for life members of the Assembly has not as yet met with any support. It is very doubtful whether in our present circumstances a further suggestion of the work is easier and lighter, and is freed from the mean faction fights of partyty energy to sit out the debates in our assembly, where hours upon hours are wasted in useless talk, and still more useless recrimination. The real work to be done is to elevate the style and tone of political debate and i

Under circumstances two different classes of members would work well together in the same chamber, while it is almost certain that members elected by the Assembly would be chosen for a temporary party grounds. Moreover, it is much easier to get men of the stamp which Lord GREY probably has in his mind to take a seat in an Upper House than in a Lower House.

Lord GARY also recommends the adoption of a system of proportionate representation. This system has already obtained some attention and support in this colony, and two selected committees of the Upper House have already recommended its adoption, if their House is to be framed on an elective basis. But though an attempt was made in the Assembly this session to get a recognition of this principle it utterly failed. The Government opposed it, and misrepresented it as a scheme intended to give minorities an undue

...ir share of power; and this authoritative statement satisfied inoleant or preoccupie people, who were glad of an excuse for not studying what they have a notion is an abstrus and complicated subject. But, in spite of discouragements of this kind, public opinion of the subject will steadily ripen.

The subject, however, which most excited the attention of the country towards the close of the session, was the proposed release of the prisoners incarcerated for bushranging, and the interest attaching to this discussion was prolonged for the time that relating to constitutional bills. The course taken by the Government in having escaped an adverse expression of opinion

...the Ministry was left free to advise or not in the matter, as they saw fit. His EXCELLENCY submitted a minute to the Cabinet in which he gave his reasons for adhering to the promise which he had already made, and further gave his reasons for defending the promise.

He also argued that the release of these prisoners was justifiable, as the condition of the punishment had been sufficiently answered. He also expressed his opinion that it would be safe to release GARDINER, the ringleader, even in Sydney, and pointed out that, with regard to the worst of the cases the condition of exile is attached to pardon. With this view he characterizes the outcry against the remission of these sentences as an unjust and an unreasonable clamour. The view taken by his EXCELLENCY is very widely dissented from, and this position of the minute is, therefore, not generally palatable. Its publication, however, has strengthened the opinion that the

by the Ministers in placing the exercise of the Royal prerogative of pardon under the control of a responsible Minister as right, and was inevitable. It is exceedingly undesirable that the Governor should exercise power in relation to local affairs which may bring him into collision with large number of people; and this can only be avoided by relieving him of all such duties as are not absolutely necessary to his position. The mischievous effect of another arrangement has been clearly illustrated in the case of these pardons. In the

ORIENTAL BANK V. THE QUEEN.—The appellant herein (the Bank) having failed to proceed with their appeal, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council heard in motion on the 16th April last, to dismiss the same for non-prosecution, and the appeal was thereupon dismissed with costs. This was the case arising out of the gold-s robbery by bushrangers, some years ago, and which has

WATERLOO CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—On Monday evening last, 29th ultimo, the lady and gentleman members of the Pitt-street Choral Society gave a highly successful and pleasing concert in the Waterloo Congregational Church. There was a large attendance, no less than 250 persons being present. The Rev. William Bradley, pastor of the church, occupied the chair. The entertainment comprised sacred and secular songs from the well-known composers, Mozart, Handel, Lyons, Richards, Wallace, and others who have enriched the world by their noble compositions. The rendition of the solo "Peace be still," and "Come unto me" was very effective; as also was the anthem "Awake, pass on strength," and the chorus "In light and happiness" from Cinderella. During the interval between the parts Mr. Alfred Orr recited "Beautiful Snow" in characteristic and eloquent style. At the close of the concert Mr. Andrew Turning moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Partridge and the members of the Choral

dict, Mr. George O'Malley Clarke, in the course of some well-considered observations reported by the Barrington Chronicle to have said:—"Understanding the progress which has been made in this colony the last years in the important matter of education, we find that we are not keeping pace in this respect with the rest of the world. The policy and necessity of compulsory education are now almost universally admitted, and their adoption is a principle throughout all civilized countries is evidently only a question of time. The chief cause which hinders his result is very obvious, and it is that all civilized communities are yearly obtaining greater liberty, and as a consequence are becoming more and more imbued with liberal politics and ideas. It must ever remain an eternal truth that liberty, to effect real, substantial, and lasting benefits on its possessors must be accompanied and guided by the necessary wisdom to sustain it, which can only be secured by intellectual enlightenment and moral culture; otherwise, instead of being the greatest boon and blessing that can be conferred upon a people, it will become a curse, and must devitably lead to misrule, revolution, and anarchy. It is the knowledge of this undoubted truth which is causing the leading politicians of the day in all countries to engage in the promotion of the cause of education. In England education is now made compulsory by law, so it is in Victoria, so it will be soon, I observe, in Queensland; and ought we to be behind-hand in recognising the necessity for similar legislation? Here in New South Wales we live in the freest country in the world, thank God! And how much now, therefore, it is imperative that the people should be made capable of responding to the obligations which this great liberty enjoins upon them? It becomes the duty of the State, which has given this liberty to the people, to ensure that they are qualified to act up to, and have a proper conception of the sacred responsibilities which it entails. I trust, therefore, that among the long education of the youth of this colony may be made compulsory, and that before another generation passes away, some of the protean anomalies which it presents may be removed.

to place a burden on our political and judicial systems by forcing them to deal with cases such as, for instance, as the unfortunate and humiliating spectacle which is presented by the two hapless marksmen who require the assistance of another person in the ballot room to enable him to record his vote for a representative of the people; or the still more pernicious and dangerous practice which is legally permitted, and of constant occurrence, under the law, of an equally ignorant man placed in the jury-box to try, or to assist in trying, a case in which the life or liberty of an innocent being whose very life perhaps depends upon his verdict. I say I trust that before many years are

THE MAIL VIA SAN FRANCISCO.—We learn from a correspondent of the Argus that lately the White Star Company addressed a letter to the Postmaster-General on the subject of the mail service, offering to dis-catch one of their boats every Wednesday from this side, which would have been available for the mail to Australia. In making the offer they pointed out from indisputable statistics that their vessels make for the quickest passages across at all seasons of the year, and that it was therefore an injury to the public that mails were not carried across the Atlantic from England by their vessels. The Government have replied, stating that the mail arrangements between England and America cannot be altered until the beginning of 1877, and, therefore, according to the usual

THE OPERA.—On Wednesday evening, Signora Palmieri appeared as Lucia in Donizetti's opera of "Lucia di Lammermoor," and gave most intelligent and musically successful rendings of the character. It is a work always a favourite with the audience, and it was received with lavish applause all through by a well-filled house. The first scene and aria for Lucia - "Bagnaremi all'altare" - was admirably rendered by the prima donna, and so also was the duet between Lucia and Eduardo (Mr. Beaumont) which followed. What is known as the mad scene is a specialty with various artists; in this part the Signora was not so successful, but in all the other passages she created quite a furore. The grand finale to the second act was never more effectively given than on Wednesday evening, and a determined effort was made to secure the result. Mr. Montmart's Eduardo is an excellent performance, with plenty of fire in the scene just alluded to. He has evidently made a careful study of the character. Signor Coliva sustained his old part of Enrico in a manner quite equal in excellence to his previous efforts. The Saturday evening of "La Juive" was repeated for the third time to a large audience, and, from the manner in which the performance was received, the opera is evidently becoming popular. This evening, "Faust" will be produced—

Nations, including China, and Boettner, who are liable to be exposed to all kinds of weather, and subject to a change of climate, should secure themselves against disease by taking a supply of Bacterin's Sanna-ran-tai. By taking it, fears of all kinds are invariably avoided, and all contagious diseases; also all fevers, colds and diseases arising from a vitiated state of the blood, produced by unwholesome food or impure air and water. —Advt.

asked for was not forthcoming, the deficiency at the end of the year would be increased to £204,866. The income to be derived from the proposed new taxes was estimated at half a million. None of these taxes, however, were carried, the bill being thrown out by the Upper House, the only additional revenue obtained being that from the postal charge on newspapers, which was estimated at £10,000 a year. The consequence of this taxation not being imposed at the time, was that the deficiency did increase. The country was not then prepared to accept the disagreeable alternative of ad valorem duties. The Ministry was blamed for not making a fresh attempt to secure the necessary revenue, but it transferred the blame to the Upper House for rejecting a scheme which the Assembly had acquiesced in. In order to raise money for immediate wants the Martin Administration issued Treasury Bills to the amount of £400,000, and so kept part of the debt afloat. It retired in 1861, leaving the deficit twice as great as it found it, in consequence of its financial proposals having been rejected. Mr. Cowen came back triumphantly, but through enjoying the return which he had to face the difficulty of the matter which his predecessors had succumbed. He was not, however, in difficulty, and after the rejection of some of his proposals in imposing some extra taxation but was obliged to accept that very policy of ad valorem duties which had been opposed when suggested by his predecessors. But to float off the pressure of the debt he issued in July of the same year short dated debentures to the amount of £550,000, payable in instalments at the rate of £100,000 per annum, the redemption commencing on the 1st of January, 1877. It will be seen, therefore, that the debentures added to the Treasury Bills, represented a total of £950,000. These Treasury Bills were receivable at the Customs for duty, and a portion of them found their way back to the Government in that manner.

The balance, to the amount of £343,200 was renewed on coming due in 1868. There was a respite to take up this obligation, which was again renewed in the following year; when finding that it was idle to treat the debt as if it could be extinguished in a year, the bills were issued with a currency of three years. They came due on the 6th of May, 1872, when they were finally paid off. There was not, however, a sufficient sum of money in the Treasury to discharge them out of surplus, and they were paid by creating a deficit in the Consolidated Revenue Account. The necessary money was really borrowed from the Loans Account. Mr. PIDDINGTON, in his financial statement of 1872, stated the matter thus:—“Besides this deficiency debt, there is the loan which will require to be raised to make good the money drawn from the Loans Account, to pay off the £343,200 of Treasury Bills that came to maturity on the 6th of May, 1872. That will make the deficiency debt £727,900, and while these Treasury Bills were maturing, the short-dated debentures had been annually coming due ever since the 1st of January, 1867, and the last payment on account of them was made at the close of the year 1872. But as there was really no surplus out of which these obligations could be paid as they matured, it followed as a necessary consequence, that the extinguishing of one debt simply created another, and it was to meet the difficulty thus arising that a fresh set of Treasury Bills to the amount of £334,600 was issued in April, 1872. These added to the debentures then due yesterday, and which for some months past have been the only lingering representatives of the late deficit. The TREASURER could have comfortably paid them off twelve months ago, and could the coming prospect of the colony have been foreseen, these bills would have been issued with a shorter currency. It will be remembered that the AUDITOR-GENERAL in one of his statements estimated that the deficit was even then scarcely reduced at all, inasmuch as the portion not represented by Treasury Bills was represented by outstanding obligations and overdrafts. Practically, therefore, it has fallen to Mr. LLOYD's good fortune really to pay off nearly the whole of this deficit. The revenue that has rolled in during his tenure of office has enabled him to make good the overdraft of £343,200 created by Sir JAMES MARTIN's redemption of Treasury Bills to that amount; secondly, the last instalment of the short-dated debentures to the amount of £146,700; and finally, the last issue of Treasury Bills, to the amount of £334,600. Altogether, therefore, Mr. LLOYD has been happy in making good past debts to the amount of £724,500.

O. fortuitum natus—a common saying.

From this summary it will be seen that for nearly ten years the colony struggled with a deficiency, and, in spite of increased taxes and repeated changes of Administration, was unable to get it under. It was not till an unexpected turn of good fortune took place that the revenue proved itself sufficiently elastic to furnish a surplus in excess of the increased expenditure. We have learned this lesson, that it is possible for us to go astray in two years to an extent which in ten years we cannot recover—that we were unable, either by dint of economy or by dint of extra taxation, to make good the shortcoming, and that we had to wait until Mr. LLOYD—something turned up, which, at the end of ten years, it fortunately did. We shall be happy if we learn at least this lesson, to keep a very vigilant outlook on the balance between income and expenditure, and to see that we never for one year, still less for two, sanction an outlay which is known to be in excess of the revenue.

WEDNESDAY, the 16th JULY next, at 11 o'clock,
The above valuable and extensive pastoral property particulars of which may be obtained application at the Rooms, or by reference to SYDNEY MORNING HERALD of Thursday, June, and every succeeding Saturday's issue.
The above properties, forming, as it were, one con-compact block of country, were got together by the said proprietor at a great cost, and were intended worked in one; but matters of great importance con-

With his estates in England requiring his presence he has resolved to retire from pastoral pursuits, and the necessity for the present sale. To say that students are the pick of the Bligh District (or W. Riverina, as it is sometimes called), is hardly doing justice, as for many years they have held the characteristic of being one of the most profitable portions in the colony. Sixteen of the most profitable portions of the Sydney market—producing 229 miles of market—were at Wallerawang, their produce to the market in excellent condition, and has long borne a high price from the Sydney butchers. Capitalists, who have not hitherto ignored the necessities for which a few
